But for divers interested in searching out encounters with bizarre and beautiful critters, Lembbeh Strait, located near the port town of Bitung, hosts the best muck diving on the planet. And besides the sand, divers can take the plunge on pinnacles, walls and slopes of extravagant hard and soft coral gardens as well as a number of wrecks, some dating from WWII. Diversity is the operative word here

Amazing Marine Life -- Lembeh Strait has already been established as the mecca of what is known as muck or critter diving. Professional photographers and film crews are regular visitors to the strait, shooting award-winning images of the extraordinary inhabitants that mesmerize divers dive after dive. Pygmy seahorses, mimic octopus, flamboyant cuttlefish, mandarin fish, hairy frogfish, ghost pipefish, rhinopias, pegasus sea moths, banggai cardinal fish, stargazers, bobbit worms, harlequin shrimp, candy crabs, bobtail squid, devilfish, snake eels, etc. The list seems endless, with every dive an opportunity to discover a species new to science. The array of nudibranchs and crustaceans is astounding. The number of cephalopod species on display is amazing. The assortment of eels and venomous fish species is limitless. "Going macro" will open an entire new world to divers who follow the maxim "go slow and look down".
